INSIGHT OF THE WEEK

ARTICLE HERE

A comprehensive study conducted at the Hospital for Special Surgery in New York City reveals that higher team consistency scores are significantly associated with reduced time to first incision, shorter surgery duration, and improved operating room turnover time for total hip and total knee arthroplasty procedures. While achieving consistent teams of surgeons, anesthesiologists, and nurses can be challenging from an operating room management perspective, this research study underscores the critical impact of team cohesion on patient outcomes. These findings provide compelling evidence that prioritizing team consistency can lead to more efficient surgical processes and better patient outcomes.
